

Can you help the fastest declining UK bird?

The Stepping Stones Project is looking for volunteers who want to learn how to survey for willow tits in south Shropshire. Interested?

©National Trust Images/Richard Bradshaw

This is part of our Species Recovery work to help willow tit populations recover. An important step is to understand more about where they are found. This will help us focus conservation efforts.

You will need to attend two training sessions:

1. Online 'classroom' session on 20th Jan covering background and survey methodology.
2. Field session on 10th Feb, where you will practice the survey techniques in the field.

Prior experience

None needed. However it will help if you have some experience of bird identification, especially using their songs and calls. Willow tit surveys rely on identifying their calls, so it is essential that you are able to hear bird calls.

Places are limited and we need to act quickly to safeguard the future of this lovely bird, so please only sign up if you are committed to undertaking both training sessions and becoming a 'fully-fledged' willow tit surveyor.

For more details or to register,
scan below or email
charlie.bell@nationaltrust.org.uk

